Pat Taylor

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Pat Taylor, the philanthropist oilman who designed the precursor of Louisiana's generous free college tuition program known as TOPS, died Friday. He was 67.

Taylor died at Touro Infirmary of complications of heart surgery, said James Caillier, spokesman for Taylor Energy Co., an oil and natural gas exploration firm.

Taylor had been hospitalized since undergoing open heart surgery Sept. 29.

Taylor created the "Taylor Plan" to reward good students after a speech at a New Orleans middle school in 1988. Although many of the students were in trouble, they all said they wanted to go to college, so Taylor, on the spur of the moment, promised them he would pay for it if they stuck with school and graduated with a B average.

His idea later was picked up and became the state-financed Tuition Opportunity Program for Students, or TOPS, which sends virtually every good student to college in the state.

Taylor was born in Texas, near the site of the famous Spindletop first oil discovery.
